The Health Care Systems Research Network, formerly known as the HMO Research Network, includes 19 research centers, each associated with a health care delivery system. Researchers at the centers collaborate on multi-site studies in real-world health care settings across the United States and in Israel. With health care systems serving more than 28.4 million individual patients, the Health Care Systems Research Network can draw conclusions about how best to care for both common and rare health concerns. Network researchers have been answering pressing questions about keeping people healthy and delivering effective care since 1994.
